

In the late 1800s and early 1900s, many children who lived in the countryside in Oxford County went to a one room schoolhouse. Most children walked to school. In the winter the school was heated by a stove in the middle of the room. Students learned math, reading, writing, geography, history and science.